7.6.1 Measurement results echocardiography

Type	Examination (unit)
Superordinate	Echocardiography, p. 2419 (Project)
Name	Measurement results echocardiography
Title	-
Description	Results of the manual reading of the 3D echocardiography image data. Missing values are generally due to insufficient quality or incorrect collection of the image data. The proportion of examinations in which all 8 measured values are missing is less than 1%, as is the proportion of examinations in which all 8 measured values are present. For technical reasons, it was not possible to collect the 3D variables at the beginning of the reading. The analysis of the extreme values of the various variables by gender, age or examiner did not reveal any indications of implausible or obviously incorrect, erroneous data.

7.7.3.1.2 Evaluation variables

The basis for the heart rate (HR)-related performance parameters is the corrected mean heart rate (HR) at the end of each exercise stage. The calculation of the HR-related performance parameters was performed based on the principle of Physical Work Capacity (PWC) and, alternatively, using the estimated maximum oxygen uptake (VO2max). The PWC principle determines the workload achieved when exceeding a defined HR threshold. Relative HR thresholds are particularly suitable for this purpose, as they account for the age-related decline in HR. PWC 75% (variable a_erg_pwc75 or a_erg_pwc75_kg) indicates the workload (in W or W/kg) achieved by a participant when reaching 75% of their individual maximum heart rate. PWC130 (variable a_erg_pwc130p or a_erg_pwc130p_kg) indicates the workload achieved by a participant when reaching an HR of 130/min. The calculation of VO2max (variable a_erg_vo2_max) was performed in two steps: First, the maximum workload (in W) was estimated based on the observed increase in HR across the exercise stages and the age-based maximum heart rate limit according to Tanaka (208 - 0.7 x basis_age) using linear regression (variable a_erg_wm_kg). Using the estimated maximum workload, VO2max was calculated according to the formula of the American College of Sports Medicine: VO2max= 33.5 + 12.24 x Wattmax_kg. Cases with a_erg_done=2 ("handle with care") should be considered separately in sensitivity analyses when evaluating heart rate-related cardiorespiratory fitness (CRF).

Type	Variable
Superordinate	Ergometry evaluation, p. 2497 (Examination)
In subsection 2	Evaluation of the cycle ergometry test
In subsection 1	Evaluation variables
Title	HF-related power in watts/kg at the HF threshold 75%
Description	Heart rate-related performance in watts/kg at the heart rate threshold of 75%. Optimal variable for general analyses of cardiorespiratory fitness, as it is predominantly based on measured values and less on estimated values. The threshold of 75% of the calculated maximum heart rate was reached by 81% (baseline) and 77% (second examination) of the participants in successfully performed ergometries.

7.11.1.1 Neuropsychological test battery

The neuropsychological test battery comprises 6 individual tests, four of which were taken from the CERAD_Plus test battery (Morris JC 1989). The module-specific results test showed the expected results. Women performed better than men in all tests, younger people performed better than older people in numerous tests and test subjects with a higher level of education performed better than those with a shorter period of education. Furthermore, German language skills (see variable a_ses_deutsch) had a strong influence on all test results.

7.11.1.1.2 Test 2: Word list

Test of verbal learning and memorisation skills. The respondent is asked to memorise a list of 12 words, which is first played twice in succession (immediate recall). After each presentation of the word list, the respondent is asked to name all the words that he/she has memorised within 60 seconds. After test 4, the respondent is asked to freely name all the memorised words within 60 seconds without playing them again (delayed recall). 10 of the 12 words represent the word list of the CERAD-Plus neuropsychological test battery. This list was supplemented by 2 terms that have the same word frequency in the German language as the 10 in order to avoid ceiling effects in younger participants.

7.11.1.1.3 Test 3: Colour-word interference test (Stroop test)

Multidimensional performance test that measures elementary information processing skills (executive skills). It aims to process conflicting information and to measure the "response conflict" or the "lack of response inhibition" or the "lack of selective attention". It is therefore also a measure of "concentration effectiveness" or distractibility. Only Scales 2 and 3 are used in the NAKO Health Study. The proband is instructed to name the print colour of the box or the colour words in both sheets. In the interference condition of the test (panel 3), the print colour and colour word do not match.

7.11.1.1.6 Test 6: Number sequence test

The ZRT can be seen as a proxy for a comprehensive assessment of fluid intelligence. It requires the completion of a series of numbers by inductively recognising and applying a set of rules. A block-adaptive version with six items based on the Woodcock-Johnson III (WJ-III) test was used. The reliability of the estimation of the ability parameters must be regarded as limited due to the brevity of the ZRT used in comparison to the reliabilities achieved with the time-consuming task batteries usually used in intelligence testing.

7.11.1.1.8 Domain scores

The individual test results of the neuropsychological test battery can be summarized into two cognitive domains, memory and executive function, using factor analysis. The mean value of both domains results in a global cognitive factor.

7.11.1.1.8.1 Memory domain score

Type	Variable
Superordinate	Neuropsychological test battery, p. 2605 (Examination)
In subsection 2	Neuropsychological test battery
In subsection 1	Domain scores
Title	Memory domain score
Description	Memory function factor score derived from variables a_npsy_sumts2_1, a_npsy_sumts2_2, and a_npsy_sumts2_3 according to Kleineidam et al. (2022; https://doi.org/10.1080/15622975.2021.2011408). Individuals with significant disturbances during neuropsychological testing or hearing problems, and scores calculated from fewer than two neuropsychological tests of memory function were excluded. Higher scores indicate higher cognitive function. Factor scores are standardized (Mean=0, SD=1), based on data from all individuals with available scores. Recommendation: Check for influence of German language proficiency during analyses (variable a_ses_deutsch; covariate adjustment and effect modification, for an example see https://doi.org/10.1080/15622975.2021.2011408). Type	Variable
Superordinate	Neuropsychological test battery, p. 2605 (Examination)
In subsection 2	Neuropsychological test battery
In subsection 1	Domain scores
Title	Cognitive group classification (German native speakers aged 45 years and older only)
Description	Three-tiered cognitive group classification of German native speakers aged 45+ years. This categorization can be used when the derived categories are to be related to the likelihood of acquired cognitive impairment and underlying diseases (e.g., neurodegenerative conditions). Age-, sex- and years of education-adjusted normative data was derived quantile regression models fitted in the NAKO sample aged 45+ years, who met the following criteria: complete neuropsychological data (tests 1-4) available, no significant disturbance during neuropsychological testing, no acute symptoms of depression (PHQ-9 > 10) or anxiety (GAD-7 < 10) and no relevant neurological conditions (epilepsy, Parkinson's disease, stroke). The cognitive group algorithm incorporates two core criteria: 1) a performance below the age-, sex- and education-adjusted 3rd percentile in the memory or executive function factor scores for German native speakers (a_npsy_mem_native, a_npsy_exe_native); 2) a number of impaired tests (i.e., test performances below the age-, sex- and education-adjusted 16th percentile) scoring in the bottom 10% of the normative sample (see above for normative sample criteria). The latter criterion was met, if ≥5 out of 10 neuropsychological test indicators scored below the age-, sex- and education-adjusted 16th percentile. See the "Recommendations for the analyses of the neuropsychological testbattery in NAKO" for an extended explanation of the rationale behind these classifications.

7.12.3 Quality grading of fundus images

Type	Examination (unit)
Superordinate	Retinal photography, p. 2662 (Project)
Name	Quality grading of fundus images
Title	Quality grading of fundus images using prediction models
Description	Quality grading results from four different open-source quality prediction models. For all models, default parameters were used. The images were pre-processed using the 'Fundus Image Toolbox' (Gervelmeyer et al., 2025, doi:10.21105/joss.07101) to crop and center the fundus images, and resized to 512×512 pixels before using them as input to the models. Results are reported per image: each participant has up to three retakes (1, 2, 3) of four image fields, left central (lc), left nasal (ln), right central (rc) and right nasal (rn). The image is encoded in the variable name suffix, e.g. '_lc1' = left eye, central field, retake 1. Courtesy of Dr. Alexandra Schweig and Dr. Philipp Berens, Tübingen University Medical Center. It is highly recommended to contact the two NAKO investigators.

7.12.3.1 Model 1 (Fundus Image Toolbox)

Quality grading results from the model included in the "Fundus Image Toolbox" (Gervelmeyer et al., 2025, doi:10.21105/joss.07101). Quality is rated on a scale from 0 to 1 (ungradable to gradable). We used the default threshold of 0.25, classifying images with higher scores as gradable.

7.12.4 Morphological ophthalmic data

Type	Examination (unit)
Superordinate	Retinal photography, p. 2662 (Project)
Name	Morphological ophthalmic data
Title	Morphological ophthalmic data obtained from neuron. networks
Description	Morphological measurements extracted using 'AutoMorph' (Zhou et al., 2022, doi:10.1167/tvst.11.7.12) from the macula-centered fundus images (left central and right central, retake 1). Values are reported as returned by AutoMorph without post-processing; implausible values (e.g. negative ratios) were not removed and should be checked before analysis. We did not correct for magnification due to differences in axial length, corneal curvature or refractive error, as this information was not available in the NAKO module. Courtesy of Dr. Alexandra Schweig and Dr. Philipp Berens, Tübingen University Medical Center. It is highly recommended to contact the two NAKO investigators.

7.14 SOMNOwatch

Type	Project
Superordinate	examinations, p. 2305 (Program)
Title	SOMNOwatch
Name	SOMNOwatch
Description	"The SOMNOwatch module is used to record sleep parameters (including sleep disorders) and to perform 24-hour long-term ECG recordings. The SOMNOwatch device is worn on the wrist of the non-dominant arm for a measurement period of 24 hours. A single-channel ECG is recorded via three electrodes, and respiratory airflow is measured during the sleep phase using a nasal cannula. The data from 3-axis accelerometry, ECG, and respiratory airflow are stored unfiltered at a high sampling rate (128 or 256 Hz) in a file in European Data Format (EDF). Additional technical measurement data and light intensity are also recorded. Participants are also asked to document the exact times of going to bed, intended sleep onset, waking up, getting up, taking naps, or periods when the device was not worn in a sleep diary. At baseline, a response rate of 8.3% among all participants and 30.9% among Level 2 participants was achieved, with satisfactory data quality. In particular, the completeness of the three SOMNOwatch sub-signals is noteworthy. Accelerometry measurements met the quality criteria and were complete in 93.8% of cases, 24-hour long-term ECG recordings in 90.2%, and nocturnal respiratory airflow measurements in 75.7%. Sleep–wake behavior analysis is performed based on accelerometry measurements. For scientific use, nine sleep parameters (largely plausible for 84.6% of the measurements) and several error/status variables were derived. An evaluation of the long-term ECG recordings and the determination of ECG and heart rate variability parameters have not yet been performed."

7.16.3.2 AIx-Data

Diastolic central blood pressure and mean central blood pressure are not calculated by the Vascular Explorer algorithm but are set equal to the corresponding brachial values (vae_ex_br_dias and vae_ex_br_map). Accordingly, no separate variables for these parameters are provided for analyses. Central pulse pressure (vae_ex_ao_pp) is calculated from the central systolic pressure determined by the device (vae_ex_ao_sys) and the central diastolic pressure set as described above. This approach is based on the assumption underlying the device manufacturer's methodology that diastolic and mean arterial pressure remain largely constant (https://www.kup.at/kup/pdf/6925.pdf). When using these parameters, each applicant should assess whether they can accept these assumptions.

7.19.2 Dental status data

Type	Examination (unit)
Superordinate	Dental status, p. 3216 (Project)
Name	Dental status data
Title	-
Description	Oral health: Dental examination data. Due to implementation errors, only the right side was predominantly analysed until May 2016; from May 2016 onwards, the right or left side was analysed approximately equally. The values 8 and 9 mm in the pocket depths are overrepresented due to software errors (see description of the variable zahn_swversion). These errors could only be corrected if the data was clear. By comparing the tooth and denture findings from the basic study data with the calibration data (approx. 2,000 cases), 592 "newly grown" teeth were identified, particularly in the premolar and molar region. The following scenarios appear plausible: bridge -> crown; "newly grown tooth" due to gap closure (tooth missing without prosthetic restoration -> tooth present without/with restoration); implant -> tooth present. In a few cases, a breakthrough of the number 8 could be suspected as the cause of the "newly grown" tooth. When processing the data as part of a data utilisation request, these uncertainties in the dental and prosthetic findings must be taken into account and, if necessary, the data from the calibration or second examinations must also be requested in order to be able to evaluate the data with regard to its plausibility and correctness. Implausible data can only be corrected in the course of a third examination at the earliest.

Type	Examination (unit)
Superordinate	Dental status, p. 3216 (Project)
Name	Zahnzahl
Title	Erfassung der Zahn- und Prothesenanzahl
Description	Erfassung der Zahn- und Prothesenanzahl (Level 1). Einschränkungen der Datenqualität: Bei 15,1% der Teilnehmer, für die Daten sowohl in der Baseline- als auch der Kalibrierungsuntersuchung vorliegen, wurde in der Kalibrierungsuntersuchung eine größere Zahnzahl als in der Baseline-Untersuchung dokumentiert. In 0,1% der Fälle wurde eine unplausible Wertekombination von Prothesenzahl=2 und Zahnzahl>25 dokumentiert. In 9 Fällen wurde trotz Angabe von Totalprothese in Ober- und Unterkiefer eine Zahnzahl>0 dokumentiert. Diese Unplausibilitäten lässt sich nur anhand der Daten der Baseline-Untersuchung nicht korrigieren, eine Plausibilisierung ist evtl. nach Abschluss der Zweituntersuchung möglich.
