12.5.1.1.2 [Length and width of the hand]

The following questions relate to the description of your tattoos. We ask you to use the area of your hand as a reference for the unit of measurement. This unit of measurement is practical because it has a direct relation to the body surface and is also much quicker than measuring with a tape measure, which not everyone has to hand. So that we know how big your hand is, we first ask you to measure it as shown in the illustration opposite with your thumbs together. If necessary, you can use the ruler on the last page of this questionnaire.

Title	Level-3-Project 049 Neck circumference Kiel
Name	Level 3 Project 049 Neck circumference Kiel
Description	Neck circumference is a simple, quick and non-invasive anthropometric parameter to measure. It has already been investigated in some studies as a surrogate parameter for upper body adipose tissue and showed associations with cardiovascular and metabolic risk factors. Respiratory, urological and sleep-related diseases also seem to be associated with the neck circumference. In a level-3-project at the NAKO study centre in Kiel, the neck circumference of a large proportion of NAKO participants was measured during the baseline examination according to a standardised procedure.

Type	Examination (unit)
Superordinate	Level 3 Project 011 Parocard/033 Microtooth, p. 6760 (Project)
Name	Parocard dental examination
Title	Parocard Dental examination
Description	L3 Parocard dental examination (L3 project 011). If baseline and calibration baseline data are available for a participant, the data set with higher completeness should be used in each case. In four cases, an implausible value in relation to the baseline was documented for the dental status in the calibration examination. This implausibility was not corrected. Loosening degrees 0 and 1 on non-crowned teeth with an increased clinical attachment level were checked as far as possible using the scan and corrected for implausibility if necessary. Derived variables in l3_011_zmu_abg.
